Access to Justice for Marginalized Women Bridging the Gap in Legal Protections and Somatic Healing

Examining barriers to marginalized women's access to justice, this lecture series examine systemic issues in legal frameworks and societal barriers to reporting gender-based violence. It underscores the compounded struggles faced by marginalized women due to intersecting identities. Advocating for somatic healing practices as a form of justice, our series acknowledge the impact of trauma and promotes resilience through somatic healing. By shedding light on these challenges, we will contribute to the discourse on women's rights, emphasizing the urgent need to dismantle systemic gender-based inequalities while centering somatic healing.
